Cooking is so much easier when you don't have to keep your fingers crossed.

Know going in how the dish will come out.

Power under precise control. That's Wolf cooking. The dual-stacked, sealed burners of our gas cooktops can furnish an extraordinarily subtle flame to keep delicate ingredients at a low, slow simmer. Instead of hovering with a worried eye, you can relax and look forward to a delicious result. wolfappliance.com

CHASING BEAUTY

I was recently entranced by something I saw on Instagram. No, it wasn't someone taking a portrait with a selfie stick, a tantalizing food shot from a five-star restaurant, toned bodies at the beach, or drone footage of an exotic locale (which can often induce a strong case of wanderlust). It was a giant blue agave. The silvery gray–and–dusty blue specimen overflowed what appeared to be its 15-gallon container as well as the entire back end of the SUV it was in. That could be the perfect houseplant, I thought to myself. According to the USDA's plant-hardiness map, I live in Zone 6 (think cold winters), which isn't quite the same as Southern California, where agaves proliferate outdoors. In lieu of potted ferns, clipped rosemary, or a fiddle-leaf fig tree—all lovely houseplants—I thought the sculptural shape of the agave would be a welcome addition. But after traipsing to about a dozen nurseries and greenhouses without success, I simply gave up.

When I did finally stumble upon one (figuratively, not literally), I realized I had overlooked a tiny yet important practicality: the needlelike spines at the end of each leaf, which can be terrifyingly painful to bump into. So, alas, the quest continued. Potted citrus? Too big. Miniature boxwoods? Not quite right. Two tabletop-size olive trees with leaves featuring similar dusty tones seemed to fit the bill. Granted, they, too, are meant for the outdoors, but I'll give it my all to nurture them. As we transition into spring, this issue celebrates the best of the season, as well as the promise of what lies ahead. Enjoy it from the garden, or perhaps on your digital device. Just leave the selfie stick at home.

Clinton.

California Classics

Suzanne Tucker—a protégée of design legend Michael Taylor, the pioneer who defined the pared-down sensuality of the "California look" from the 1950s through the '80s—is a San Francisco–based practitioner whose work bridges old-world classicism with the unbuttoned lifestyle of the left coast. Her new Riviera line of outdoor furniture for Michael Taylor Designs encapsulates that aesthetic. The sculptural chaises, chairs, and tables echo 18th-century lines in teak and resin wicker—a just-so balance of past and present that will fit right in on porches from Montecito to Palm Beach.

BRIGHT IDEAS Oliver Street Designs, the new brainchild of Fleming James, is a lighting company with an elevated sense of craft. James's sconces, pendants, and lamps adopt luxe little details—leather-wrapped arms, pleated silk shades, lacquered brass—and a crisp and polished sensibility that feels delightfully soigné. To the trade; oliverstreetdesigns.com.

Couture Carats

Having created pieces for Harry Winston and Tiffany & Co., "jeweler's jeweler" Maria Canale is known for her elegant way with diamonds. Now, in a collaboration with Neiman Marcus, Canale has debuted a bespoke line in which clients commission an item and participate in the design process, from selecting a rough stone to sketching, cutting, and setting a unique work of art. It gloriously redefines the notion of custom-made. neimanmarcus.com.

Master Strokes

In the latest installment of her company's Masters Aluminum Series, Janus et Cie owner Janice Feldman has once again collaborated with San Francisco–based designer Orlando Diaz-Azcuy to create a handsome collection of outdoor pieces that have all the delicacy and grace of furniture you would gladly deploy in the living room. Inflected with the genteel vibe of the Southern city for which it's named, the chairs and sofas in the new Savannah line feature sensually curving arms and legs and pretty oval seat-back motifs set into a cane-like layer of mesh, all in a user-friendly scale that transforms powder-coated aluminum into a rarefied thing of beauty, readily available in 20 shades.

EMINENT ELEGANCE

Jan Showers's new collection for Kravet bears the Dallas-based designer's trademark, with feminine pieces in pale shades inspired by vintage French finds. The Gallic influence comes through in subtle touches—glimmering gilt edges on a commode, curving lines on a banquette—that add up to a whole lot of chic. To the trade; kravet.com.

By the time Josie Natori showed up for her appointment at Bloomingdale's in 1977 carrying the cotton peasant blouse she would build her lingerie brand on, she had already tried her hand at selling baskets and reproduction Chippendale furniture from her native Philippines. "I got into fashion by accident," she says.

The buyer she was meeting worked in lingerie and was intrigued by the shirt's simple lines and handmade embroidery. She asked Natori to modify it into a nightshirt, and the resulting sleepwear—neither Frederick's of Hollywood nor buttoned-up grand-mère—filled an empty niche in the market. "It was the right time and the right place. We came to the category with a fresh approach. Orders came in instantly."

Thirty-nine years later, the company has expanded to include everything from ready-to-wear to perfume to housewares, all steeped in the Natori aesthetic. Craftsmanship is still a touchstone, with an emphasis on modern, classic shapes and lines that skew sensual but never sexy—think cerulean jersey toppers that move easily from day to night and sleek silk chemises with just-so scallops of lace. "Women have to do 10 things all at the same time. These are clothes that will work for them: versatile, comfortable, practical. I believe in timeless clothes that don't self-destruct." ☐

TRUESIMMER: Achieving the perfect temperature and even heat for simmering is easy with Miele's TrueSimmer function.

ENTERTAINING AT HOME We love to entertain and we host dinner parties almost every Thursday and even more often during the holidays and summertime. Friends and family pitch in and dinners become lively events with lots of laughter and storytelling while dinner is being prepared.

"It's a family affair and our kitchen is always the center of our dinner parties and a large part of the entertainment factor."

PERFECT SOLUTION Our kitchen island holds our rangetop, which allows multiple people to assist in cooking. The ability for one person to simmer sauces while another is searing meat, all in one place, makes the Miele Rangetop the perfect solution for dinner parties. Simmering my favorite peppercorn sauce is a no-brainer with the TrueSimmer technology that Miele offers.

EASY CLEANUP Convenience is also an important factor in the kitchen. We spend so much time in our kitchen and at the end of the night, cleaning up is a big job—Miele makes this task easier.

"I love that the ComfortClean grates on all Miele Ranges are dishwasher-safe. The Miele Range Hoods also have dishwasher-safe baffle filters."

REDEFINING EASE & CONVENIENCE: Miele's 48" Range includes a fully functional speed oven, convection oven and push-to-open warming drawer. It's the only range on the market that has this unique 3-door concept, allowing me to prepare all my favorite types of dishes with ease and at the same time!

"I follow the same philosophy in my kitchen as in my business: I want speedy solutions without compromising quality, performance and results. MasterChef allows you to choose from over 100 easy-to-use automatic programs, making preparation a breeze. I especially like the menu of options that guide you step-by-step to the desired oven mode and temperature to create the perfect dish. I used to be intimidated to cook certain dishes in my kitchen. Miele has given me the confidence to cook differently."

IN GOOD TASTE

Designer Matthew Quinn's kitchens are bright, chic spaces in which function happily unites with form.

Matthew Quinn's parents had one request of their child: that he become a doctor. "I got my B.A. in chemistry, but on the third day of med-school orientation, I had a nervous breakdown," he says. He took his parents' credit cards and flew to Paris. "It was easier to tell them I'd dropped out from a different country!" They cut off the cards, but Quinn stayed on for a month, scraping by in hostels and sussing out his next step, all while soaking in the charms of the City of Light. "If you spend enough time in Paris, you either want to be an architect or an artist," he says.

He switched gears, went back to school, and, while earning an interior-design degree, became a draftsman at Design Galleria in Atlanta, long a kitchen-and-bath source for cognoscenti. With his background in science, the mechanics of plotting out kitchens appealed to him. "It's also ABOVE: Quinn likes to combine a range of metal finishes in a single space, like stainless steel with unlacquered and brushed brass in this Nashville kitchen. Open shelves allow sunshine to flow through the room; library sconces keep it from feeling too much like a kitchen. RIGHT: The hand-made glazed ceramic tiles on the walls have uneven, thumb-printed edges that catch the light. the closest thing to architecture. It's all about sight lines, organization, and aisle widths," he says.

Quinn now owns Design Galleria, and his kitchens grace houses from Atlanta to New York. In 2014, he was invited to participate in the Kips Bay Decorator Show House, an annual Manhattan charity event that reads as a who's who of design notables. The kitchen he created there—with crazed blue tiles, a limestone and brass hood, and futuristic brass-orb pendants—typifies a colorful aesthetic that runs the gamut from traditional to modern.

His new book, Quintessential Kitchens (Parrish Press), is a fitting showcase. It includes the Nashville kitchen on these pages, designed for a La Cornue executive. The surprising hues are the draw; Quinn managed to turn mixed metals and an orange range into something that feels classic. "How long has Hermès had orange as their signature color? It's timeless," he says. Still, Quinn argues that he's about function over form. "An organized kitchen saves time, so we know exactly where everything a client needs is going to live, from their Cuisinarts to their hot sauces." □

Elsie de Wolfe

De Wolfe (1865–1950) lived at the Villa Trianon at Versailles and swept away the brooding Victorian interiors of her day in favor of sunny, seductive rooms that were all lightness and air—think garden furniture and trelliswork indoors and pretty pastel schemes.

PAST PERFECT

The work of Lancelot "Capability" Brown gains the spotlight on the tercentenary of his birth, with a focus on the lush landscapes that changed the face of English gardening and defined the "wild" look of Britain's stateliest homes.

Pastoral splendor at Chatsworth House in Derbyshire, England.

VISITENGLAND/RICH J JONES

CLOCKWISE FROM LEFT: Lancelot "Capability" Brown in a c. 1773 portrait and a newly issued garden bust from Haddonstone; his tercentenary is being celebrated in a series of tours and lectures (capabilitybrown.org). Brown designed the park at Chatsworth House in 1760. A view of Croome Court, his first large-scale commission. Croome's Gothic-style church overlooks the park. At Blenheim Palace, Brown created winding lakes.

The approach to Petworth House, an ancestral home of the aristocratic Percy family in West Sussex, England, criss-crosses through old stands of chestnut and oak, curving around rolling hills and silvery lakes, only intermittently yielding views of the 17th-century mansion it's meant to set off. The journey—for centuries traversed by horse and carriage—creates the illusion of a vast park, giving the impression that the surrounding English countryside is part of the estate.

But the landscape is man-made, the sleight of hand a signature of 18th-century designer Lancelot "Capability" Brown, whose work is found at many of England's stately homes—from Blenheim Palace to Chatsworth House—and whose name has become synonymous with the "natural" look of English landscape gardening.

Brown carved valleys and lakes into the undulating park at Petworth House.

was the son of a yeoman farmer and trained as a gardener from a young age. By 1741, he'd moved south, to Stowe, the seat of the Temple-Grenville family and the site of a garden that was already famed. The first Viscount Cobham had been retreating from the formal lines of the late 17th century—geometric parterres, manicured beds—and adopting a more naturalistic approach, meant to mimic the existing landscape.

Brown stayed for a decade, ascending to the post of head gardener, and he used many techniques for which he would become known: sculpting hills and lakes, carving out valleys, moving mountains to rearrange views. What he created was an idealized version of the English countryside—lush, pastoral, and wild—and he built a reputation that would earn him commissions all over the country.

He struck out on his own in 1751 and hit the ground running. "He had six prime ministers as clients and half the House of Lords," says Sarah Rutherford, a historic-garden consultant and the author of the forthcoming Capability Brown and His Landscape Gardens (National Trust). "The wealthiest men of the age were desperate for his services."

He created lakes for the Duke of Marlborough and the Earl of Exeter, redirected a river for the Duke of Devonshire, and redefined the look of countless estates. "He's associated with more than 250 sites, covering 200 square miles in England and Wales," says Rutherford. His influence is even greater, inspiring gardens from India to Australia to America. "His formula was taken up by Jefferson and Olmsted," says Rutherford. "You can see his stamp on Monticello and Central Park." □

GARDEN GENIUS

ARNE MAYNARD

London-based Arne Maynard grew up in rural Dorset, England, with his fingers in the dirt: tilling soil, clearing mulch, pruning roses. "I spent my childhood earning pocket money by helping out neighbors," he says. "To this day, I consider myself a gardener, not a garden designer."

All humility aside, Maynard has gained a following for his leafy creations, which transform a few ingredients—yew, crab apples, oxeye daisies—into romantic plots that belie their simplicity. "In the house, you wouldn't have a different carpet and paint color in every single room. I like to repeat the same ingredients outside in different ways: a hedge rose growing wild here, then trained along the wall there." The thread gives the land a serene cohesion.

Stylistically, there's no single Maynard stamp. He has cultivated wild beachside retreats frilled with dune grass and scrub, geometric knot gardens on Elizabethan estates, intimate manor-house bowers enclosed by billowing yew. "It's a layered approach that comes from reading the language of the place." arnemaynard.com

INNOVATIVE RETAILERS

SHED

A shared passion for farming blossomed between Cindy Daniel and Doug Lipton as young coeds more than 30 years ago, and it grew into Shed, a bright and bustling café and market in Healdsburg, California. Deeply inspired by the back-to-earth movement, the couple sought to create a business that wasn't merely an eatery or a grocery, but rather a place that highlighted the region's impressive agricultural bounty through an all-encompassing lens.

What sets Shed apart is an approach that offers customers not just essential tools—from hand-forged herb shears and ash-wood trowels to Colombian clay cookware and glass canning jars—but also the necessary education to truly savor sustainable, farm-fresh ingredients. A heavy-hitting slate of hands-on programming is offered in its upstairs Grange venue.

Functioning as a town hall of sorts, the light-flooded space is used for seminars on subjects as varied as composting, beekeeping, and wine making and hosts literature readings and even performances by dance companies and musicians. That formula creates a vibrant culture in which local Sonoma County farmers with dirt-stained hands sit alongside buttoned-up day-trippers from San Francisco. "What we're doing here is completely rooted in community," says Daniel. healdsburgshed.com

VACHEROT & LECOUFLE

Frilly, bright Cattleyas wafting perfume; sprays of speckled red-and-white Odontoglossums like sheaves of exotic peppermints; mustachioed and striped Paphiopedilums with pouting-lip pouches—the greenhouses of Vacherot & Lecoufle in Boissy-Saint-Léger, a suburb southeast of Paris, are a wonderland for the senses and a priceless repository of some of the world's finest orchids, coveted by connoisseurs and lauded by institutions such as the Royal Horticultural Society.

Marking its 130th anniversary this year, the firm is the globe's oldest commercial grower and is now run by Philippe Lecoufle, the great-grandson of its founder. Originally a source for cut flowers, the Lecoufles mastered the art of hybridization, mixing and mating strains of orchids like artists with a paint palette, creating unique specimens—like Paphiopedilum André Le Nôtre, a burgundy-speckled lady slipper recently released—with genealogies that resemble the family trees of royal houses.

The process takes years, requiring big investments of passion and purpose—which Lecoufle has in spades. "We think, live, and love orchids," he says. lorchidee.fr

FANTASY FLORAL DESIGNERS

THE WUNDERKAMMER

"Our credo is to make people look more closely at the beauty of nature," says Amsterdam-based Florian Seyd. Along with partner Ueli Signer, Seyd owns the Wunderkammer, a floral firm sought after for wildly imaginative installations, like an enchanted forest staged at the Rijksmuseum with cherry trees and moss-and-bloom-covered tables.

The duo also runs the biannual Shop for a Week, which has a spellbinding reputation. Seyd and Signer are responsible for such feats as erecting clouds of roses along the Prinsengracht canal or outfitting a rain forest in a storefront, complete with lush palms, exotic blooms, and iridescent butterflies.

Built around a distinct theme, each iteration of the shop is wonderfully bizarre and unique—a trove overflowing with vases of orchids and lilies, majestic taxidermied peacocks, lustrous copperware, mounted nautilus shells, kaleidoscopic Chinese porcelain. "We thought we'd do it once and find out if it worked or not," Seyd says of the pop-up store; they just closed their 15th. "We think about what moves us or what we feel is in the air." thewunderkammer.eu

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP: A large installation made of roses, Hedera, and twigs is perched above the Prinsengracht canal in Amsterdam for "Fishes," the Wunderkammer's spring 2009 pop-up store. MARCH–APRIL 2016

You know the moment. The morning frost is finally gone, the trees are budding, and a soft wind rustles the leaves. Our forecast: bright days ahead.

MAX KIM-BEE

Peaceful Kingdom

For a Louisiana couple looking for a second home on the West Coast, an estate with a gracious spirit offers a sense of serenity and splendor nestled amid the rolling hills of Santa Barbara.

INTERIOR DESIGN BY ANN HOLDEN | ARCHITECTURE BY WARNER GROUP ARCHITECTS
PHOTOGRAPHY BY MAX KIM-BEE | PRODUCED BY CAROLYN ENGLEFIELD | WRITTEN BY FRANCES SCHULTZ

The grand California estate is renowned for its fountains and gardens. OPPOSITE: With the Santa Ynez Mountains as a backdrop, the stately residence features a Palladian-style portico designed by Santa Barbara architect Jack Lionel Warner.

"I KNOW IT SOUNDS DREAMY, but when we drove onto the property for the first time, a sense of peace came over me," says Donna Hines, who, with her husband, William, bought the Montecito, California, residence about three years ago as a second home. Native Louisianans, the family wanted a place to spend summers with their West Coast–based children and friends. Enthralled with the Santa Barbara enclave's stunning natural beauty, Hines was drawn to the house, set among eucalyptus and oak, and its history.

In its belle epoque prime, the aptly named Arcady was the 148-acre estate of industrialist George Owen Knapp. Host to dignitaries, socialites, and numerous soirees, Arcady was elaborately developed and celebrated for its heart-stopping views, as well as for its storied gardens and unusual outbuildings. The Hines residence was initially conceived as a music pavilion and underground ballroom. But as times and fortunes changed, the estate was eventually subdivided in the 1940s. Arcady's gracious aura remained intact, however; the pavilion in particular benefitted from a series of tasteful and sensitive owners.

When it was built, only the pavilion's staircase, terrace, and fountain were visible from the approach. Its ballroom and sunken gardens were tantalizingly out of view. In the 1950s, a residence was constructed atop the terrace, and the classical Palladian-style portico was added in the early 2000s. Imposing and yet entirely appropriate in setting and scale, the architecture achieves the kind of visual harmony that imparts a sense of order and calm, to which the Hineses instinctively responded.

The interiors, Donna felt, should follow suit. "I wanted the house to be light and airy, and not take itself too seriously," she says. To accomplish that, she called on a friend, New Orleans designer Ann Holden, whose timeless rooms never look overdecorated. The classical architecture required respect, of course, but with a relaxed California feel. "It's a balance," says Holden. "The look is traditional but current." Holden's use of antiques is prominent yet judicious. Careful placement in uncluttered rooms imbues the period pieces with a sculptural quality that makes them all the more appreciable in a contemporary context.

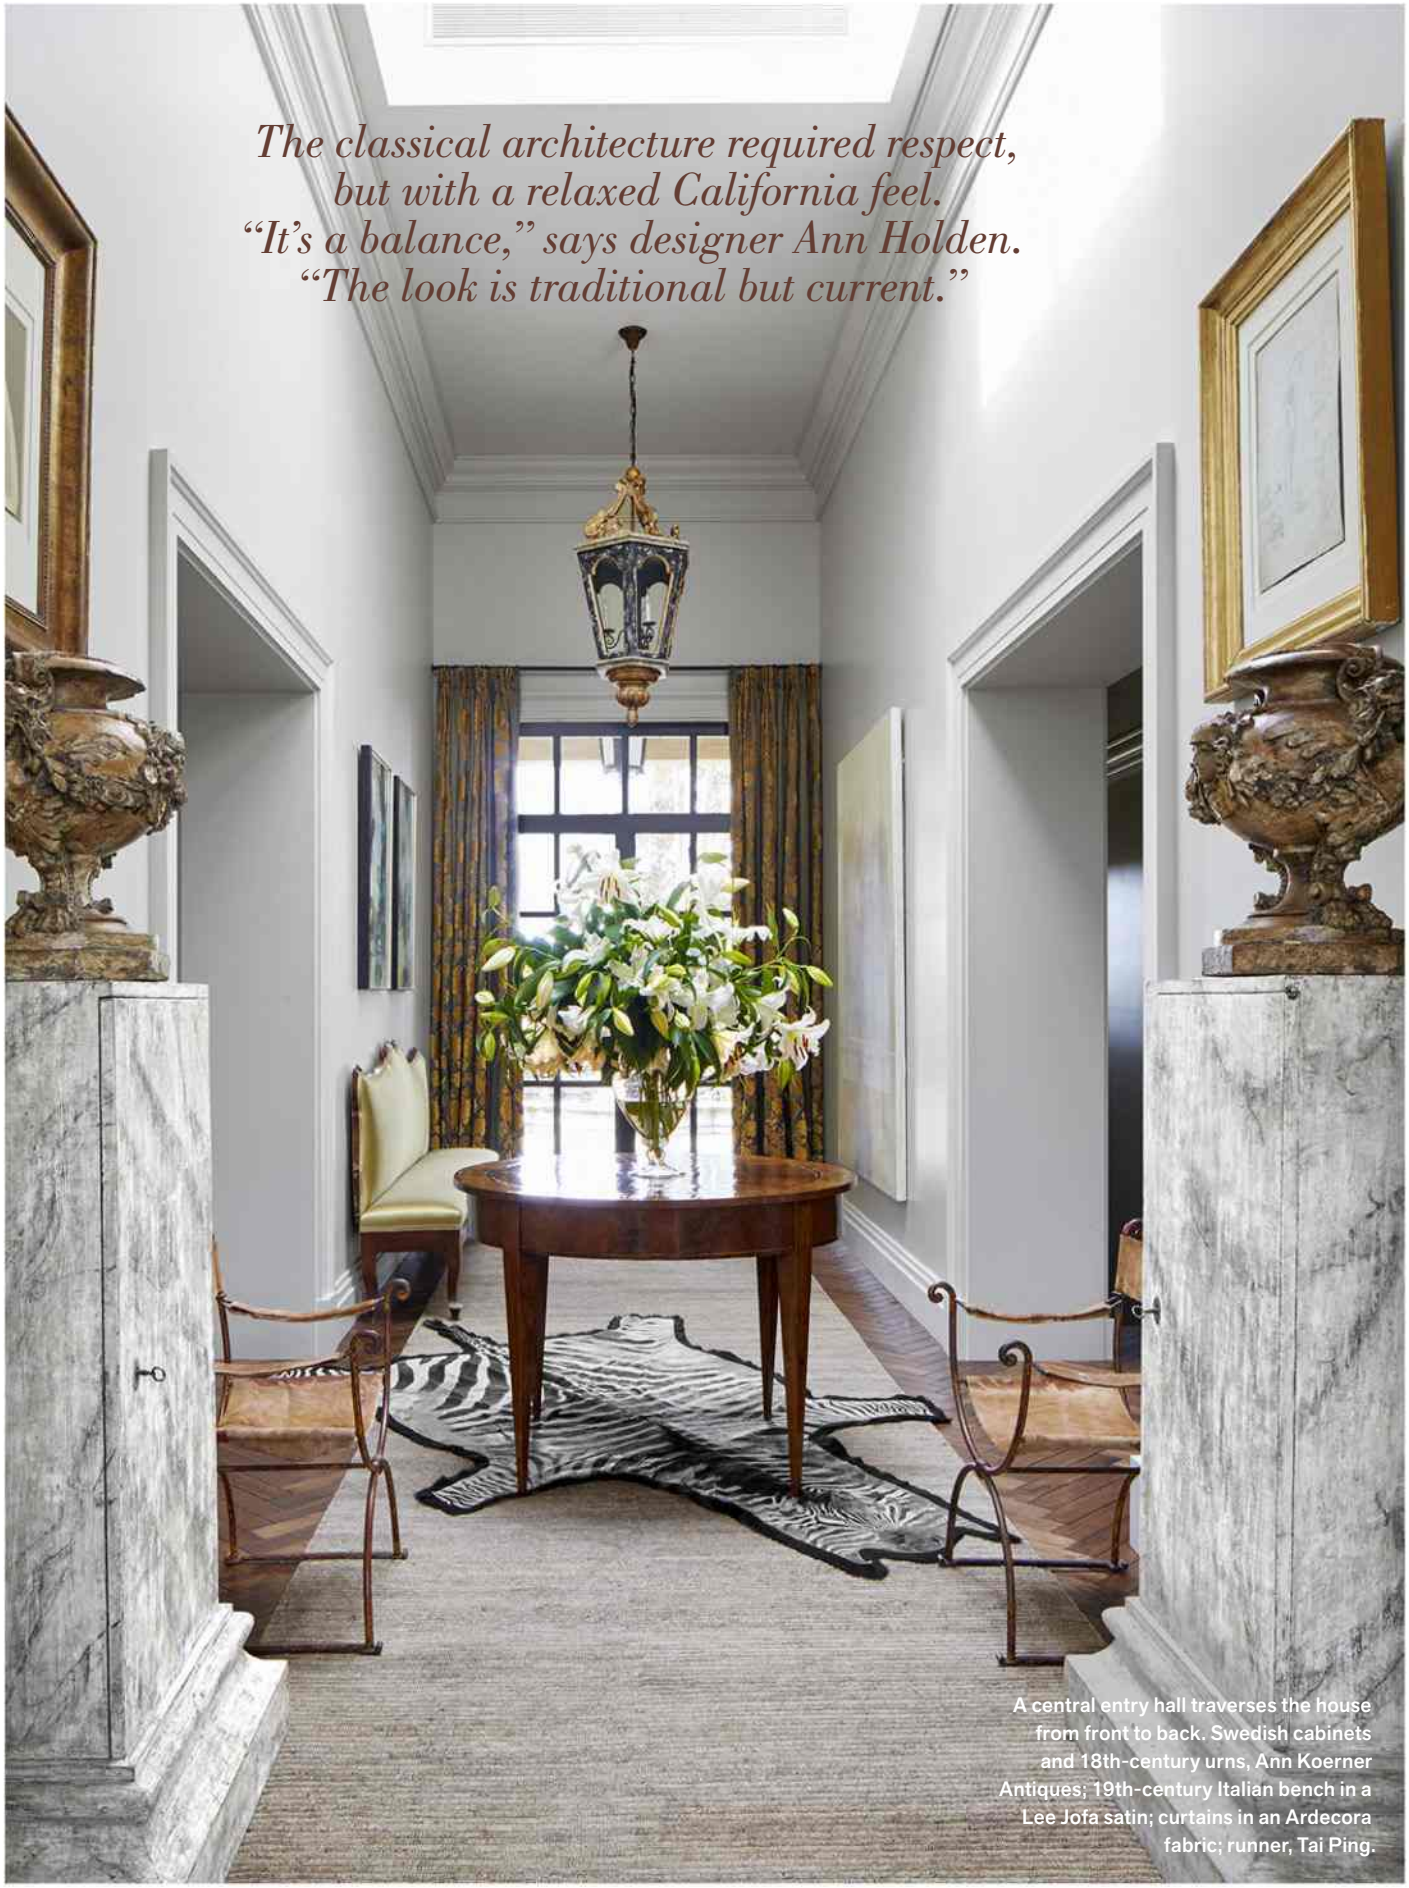

Another stroke of Holden's artistry was to divide the upper level's large open area into living, dining, and sitting rooms, bringing a more intimate scale to the spaces without sacrificing symmetry or proportion. The result is a somewhat formal upstairs and a more casual downstairs. "We want our home to be a gathering place, and we love to have a lot going on at once," Hines says, rattling off a list that ranges from cooking to karaoke. But above all, she continues, "We find a sense of contentment here, and we want to keep that—and the house—for our children and for their children."

As is often the case with inhabitants of historic houses, the Hineses see themselves as stewards, preserving a legacy as enduring as the connection between home and heart itself. ☐

A central entry hall traverses the house from front to back. Swedish cabinets and 18th-century urns, Ann Koerner Antiques; 19th-century Italian bench in a Lee Jofa satin; curtains in an Ardecora fabric; runner, Tai Ping.

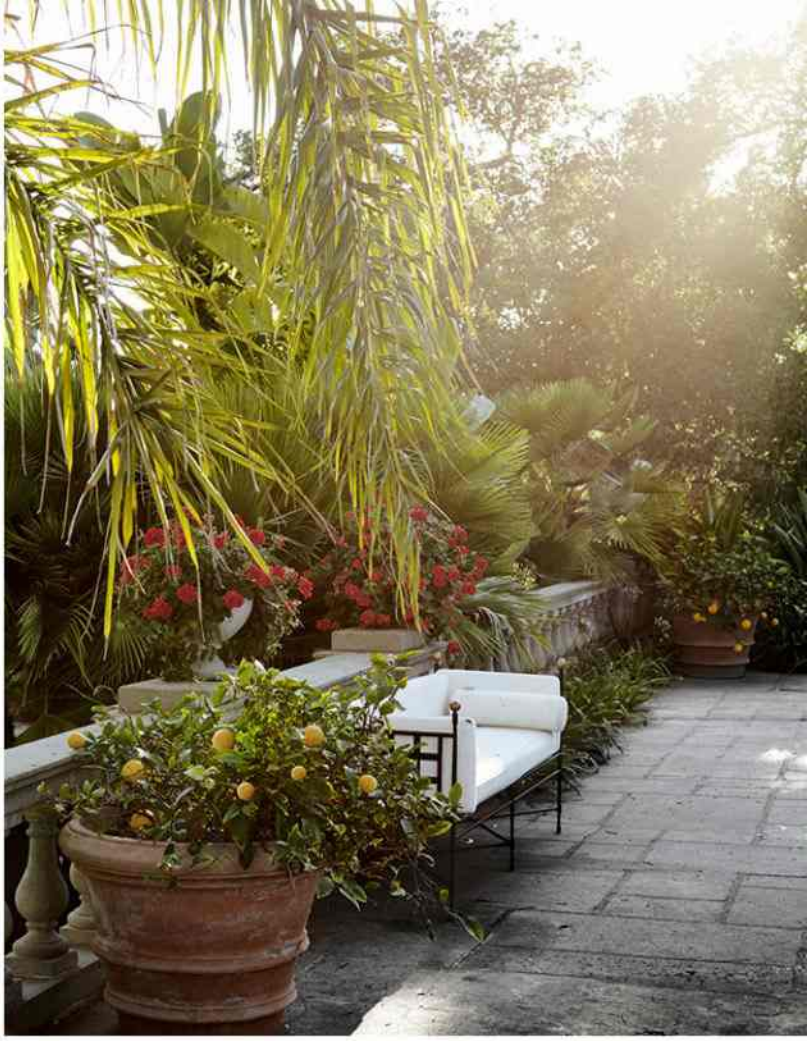

The upstairs sitting room strikes a contemporary yet cozy note, with a sleek velvet banquette and deep-gray walls. A guest bedroom opens onto the garden. Bedding, Julia B.; stools, Formations; chaise in a Great Plains cotton velvet, Ochre; curtains in a Colefax and Fowler fabric.

The glamorous pool was a Mediterranean-inspired 1950s addition, made all the more romantic with its halo of oleander and cypress. Seating and side tables, Janus et Cie. OPPOSITE: The verdant gardens brim with fountains, lush plantings, and ideal spots for outdoor entertaining. For more details, see Sourcebook.

WITH A CLIENT OPEN TO BOLD IDEAS, DESIGNER NICK OLSEN TAKES A NO-HOLDS-BARRED APPROACH TO COLOR AND PATTERN.

INTERIOR DESIGN BY NICK OLSEN | PHOTOGRAPHY BY JOSHUA McHUGH
PRODUCED BY ROBERT RUFINO | WRITTEN BY KATHLEEN HACKETT

In the entrance hall, boldly painted walls and a mix of furnishings set the tone for a country house with personality. Early-20th-century side chair in a Global Leathers leather; lamps and sconces, Circa Lighting; mirror, John Rosselli Antiques; walls in Glamour Pink and Chili Pepper, both by Benjamin Moore. OPPOSITE: Circa-1920 chandelier, Niall Smith Antiques; floor lamp, Restoration Hardware; walls in Champion Cobalt and floors in Essex Green, both by Benjamin Moore.

"MY MOTHER AND FATHER were a bit confused when they first saw the house," says Michael Lorber of his Dutchess County, New York, getaway. Most grown men might chalk up such parental disapproval to a generation gap, but when your dad is the chairman of a major real-estate firm, it's tough not to take it to heart. "They thought the house itself was fine—for a grandmother," Lorber recalls with a laugh. But for the 36-year-old Manhattan-based real-estate broker, the four-bedroom Colonial-era cottage read more like a cozy winter-weekend escape. "To be fair, it was a bit mumsy when it was on the market, but the location, property, provenance, and architectural significance of the house drew me straight to it," says Lorber, a lifelong history buff.

Built in 1747, the unassuming clapboard homestead is purported to have once housed a captain in the War of 1812. It is a detail Lorber loves about the place, as much as he cherishes the rolling hills, pond, and barn that make up the property. His relationship to the area dates to his childhood, when his father cultivated in him a passion for bird hunting.

With so much to recommend it, Lorber was not fazed by the dowdy decoration. That's because the affable bachelor had a secret weapon in interior designer Nick Olsen, who is known for turning color into an epic gesture. "Michael wanted a fantasy hunting lodge. He wanted lots of plaid and tartan," says Olsen, who was also working on the redesign of Lorber's glamorous Manhattan apartment, in which bold hues and formal furnishings reign. "Michael feels the most comfortable in spaces that are brimming with as much character as he has,"

Exposed wood beams and a painted floor serve as a rustic backdrop for exuberantly upholstered furniture. Sofa in a Ralph Lauren Home stripe; Louis XVI fauteuils in an Edelman suede; custom ottoman in a Lee Jofa felt; mirror and vases, John Rosselli Antiques; door in Bittersweet Chocolate, Benjamin Moore. OPPOSITE: Armchair and ottoman in a Bennison Fabrics crewelwork, Ann-Morris, Inc.; walls in White Dove, Benjamin Moore.

Inspired by the style of the late Bunny Mellon, Olsen had the kitchen floor painted in an eye-popping graphic pattern. Table, Restoration Hardware; custom chairs in a Carleton V plaid; armchair in a Global Leathers leather, 1stdibs; floor in Essex Green, Deep Rose, and Tea Light, all by Benjamin Moore.

Olsen adds. Eschewing Scottish fabrics altogether, he instead deployed color, scale, and pattern with a dialed-down exuberance chosen to suit both Lorber's personality and the rural setting.

Not that the hunting theme went by the wayside. "The first piece we found for the house was the stag rug in the living room," says Olsen. There is a smattering of taxidermy and stag horns and a few pieces of perfectly aged upholstered-leather furniture, but the rooms conjure the sartorial spirit of their owner far more than they do that of Teddy Roosevelt or Ernest Hemingway. "Nick understood what I wanted better than I did," says Lorber.

For his part, Olsen considers Lorber the ideal client. He points to the entry walls to illustrate Lorber's adventurous spirit. "I described it as a Nantucket red tonal stripe, but he saw it as a box from Victoria's Secret and hedged for a while," Olsen recalls. Indeed, despite a consuming passion for design, art, antiques, and objets, Lorber is smart enough to let the expert do his job, although he still loves to tease Olsen about those stripes. "Whenever I hesitated over one of his suggestions, Nick would reply, 'Trust thy decorator.' And I did," Lorber says.

If he had cold feet at all, it was only because he didn't want his friends—and his parents—to walk in and feel like they were in someone else's house. Not to worry: "My mom and dad love it. They've taken back the grandma comment," he says. □

"WHENEVER I HESITATED OVER ONE OF HIS SUGGESTIONS, NICK WOULD SAY, 'TRUST THY DECORATOR,' AND I DID."

The master bedroom is a study in textures—leather, wool, and wood—in varying shades of chocolate. Custom headboard in a Global Leathers leather; sheets, Schweitzer Linen; bed skirt in a Brunschwig & Fils stripe; pillow in a Holland & Sherry plaid; table lamp, Christopher Spitzmiller; sconce, Visual Comfort; walls in Bittersweet Chocolate and floors in Navajo White, both by Benjamin Moore. OPPOSITE: Vintage armchair in a Global Leathers leather; Albert Hadley wallpaper, Hinson; door in Viking Yellow, Benjamin Moore; vintage rug, Acme Trading Company. For more details, see Sourcebook.

ARCHITECT JAMES CARTER CREATES A NEW HOME FOR HIMSELF BUILT SPECIALLY FOR A LIFETIME'S WORTH OF CHERISHED COLLECTIONS.

INTERIOR DESIGN BY JANE HAWKINS HOKE | ARCHITECTURE BY JAMES CARTER

Antique oak paneling gives this Birmingham library a warm, weathered look. Regency armchair in a Rose Tarlow Melrose House fabric; lamps, Christopher Spitzmiller; Georgian consoles; antique Italian armillary sphere, Amy Perlin Antiques; rug, Hiltz Lauber. OPPOSITE: The exterior of the house is a combination of whitewashed brick and wood painted in Benjamin Moore's Glacier White; shutters in Duxbury Gray, Benjamin Moore.

IN 2000, ARCHITECT JAMES CARTER BOUGHT A PIECE OF PROPERTY in the leafy Birmingham community of Mountain Brook with the intention of tearing down the postwar cottage that sat on it and building his "forever" house. Typically, life got in the way. "I got too busy, then I didn't know exactly what I wanted, then the economy tanked," he says. At long last, in 2013, he scrapped the original, started from scratch, and moved in two years later.

The wait turned out to be a gift to the project. For one thing, Carter, who lived in the cottage in the interim, had plenty of time to figure out how to situate the new structure on the lot, which is especially narrow and deep. "For clients, I often do a jewel on a hill, but this property demanded something more intimate that also fit into the neighborhood," he explains. "I wanted it to be a bit rambling. I wanted quirks. I wanted personality." The resulting brick Georgian looks as though it might have grown up from the space ages ago—an effect enhanced by the soft whitewash on the brick exterior and the reclaimed-slate roof. In the end, Carter more than achieved the "easy grace" he was after: "It's not, 'Oh, look at me, I'm so special.'"

Carter began collecting for his "permanent nest" 25 years ago, which meant the interiors, too, were instantly layered. The octagonal dining room was sized to fit an Italian screen purchased years earlier, while the hallway to the master bedroom is hung with Neapolitan gouaches that currently number a whopping 27. "I love the vivid blue and the fact that they're so light and happy," he says.

To help with the mix, Carter enlisted close friend Jane Hawkins Hoke, a Birmingham designer and longtime collaborator whom he calls his "safety net and guiding spirit." When he wanted to do the dining room walls in lacquered orange, his favorite color, she talked him into apricot instead, and he was glad. "I wanted it bold but not cartoonish," he says. When Hoke was a tiny bit horrified by the gilded William Kent consoles in the paneled library, in which the other pieces are more organic, Carter prevailed. "Almost every magazine page I tore out featured rooms with eagle consoles."

In the octagonal dining room, built-in bookshelves and plainspoken bare floors lend rustic charm to fine antique furnishings. Chairs in a Zimmer + Rohde fabric, Niermann Weeks; antique French table; shade in a Rogers & Goffigon fabric with Samuel & Sons trim; walls in Butterscotch, Sherwin-Williams; wall trim in Roosevelt Taupe, Benjamin Moore. OPPOSITE: Georgian wing chair in a Jasper leather; antique American wooden armchair in a Lee Jofa fabric; club chair in a Chelsea Editions floral fabric.

Architectural drawings are hung salon-style in halls of the house. RIGHT: Neoclassical Italian dresser, Parc Monceau; antique American sconces; walls in Alaskan Skies, Benjamin Moore. BELOW: Antique American chair in a J. Robert Scott fabric; antique American ceiling fixture; doors in Off-Black, Farrow & Ball. OPPOSITE: Walls and curtains in Rogers & Goffigon fabrics; antique rug, Paige Albright Orientals.

Not all the pieces are quite so grand, but almost all are personal. As a young child, Carter watered his Shetland pony from the iron kettle in the garden's foreground; his grandmother gave him the Hummel figure of a boy sightseeing that adorns his bedroom mantel. One guest room contains his grandparents' four-poster bed, and another features a fabric by designer Suzanne Tucker, a friend.

If there's a common thread through what Carter lovingly terms the "hodgepodge," it is the books in almost every room. There are cases in the library, dining room, and master bedroom, and even along the stairway leading from the ground floor to the second-floor reception hall—where, he says, there might ordinarily be a mirror or a tapestry. "They give warmth and visual appeal. And anyway, I'm a book fiend!"

Carter has long been known for his detail work, and in the library, paneled with waxed antique white oak, the reason is on ample display. He designed the cornices, the mantel, and the overmantel, with its striking Greek key pattern. The room's French doors afford a stunning view of the green path leading to an enormous lead obelisk, which he also designed. "I always wanted a folly, and I got it," he says. Happily, he also got a "forever house" to go with it. □

JAMES CARTER BEGAN COLLECTING FOR HIS "PERMANENT NEST" 25 YEARS AGO, WHICH MEANT THE INTERIORS WERE INSTANTLY LAYERED.

The master bedroom is painted a rich green that Carter calls “strong and cozy.” Regency chair and stool, Niall Smith Antiques; sconces, Reborn Antiques from John Rosselli & Associates; walls in Cushing Green, Benjamin Moore. OPPOSITE: Canopy and bed skirt in a Rose Tarlow Melrose House fabric; bedcover in a Schumacher fabric; antique American lamps, Parc Monceau; Regency bench in a Cowtan & Tout fabric; Roman shade in a Bennison Fabrics floral; rug, Paige Albright Orientals.

Golden accents and charming floral fabrics enliven the bedrooms. CLOCKWISE FROM RIGHT: Bedding, Traditions Linens; canopy and bed skirt in a Jane Shelton fabric; walls in Edgy Gold, Sherwin-Williams. Antique French desk and side table. Sink and fittings, Waterworks; sconce, Vaughan; custom cabinetry in a Schumacher ticking fabric with knobs by E.R. Butler & Co.; Roman shade in a Bennison fabric. OPPOSITE: Directoire bed; bedcover in a Holland & Sherry fabric; chair in a Suzanne Tucker Home fabric, Amy Perlin Antiques; pillows in a Rogers & Goffigon tartan; wallpaper, Sanderson; antique rug, Paige Albright Orientals. I WANTED QUIRKS. I WANTED PERSONALITY."

Return Engagement

TO REFRESH A LONGTIME CLIENT'S MANHATTAN APARTMENT, DESIGNER VICENTE WOLF KNEW EXACTLY WHAT TO DO: MAKE IT LIGHT, BRIGHT, AND PICTURE-PERFECT.

In the open living area, black and gold accents ground the ethereal palette. Mies van der Rohe bench, Knoll; 18th-century armchairs in an Edelman leather; custom armchair in a Rogers & Goffigon fabric; custom sofa in a KnollTextiles fabric; cowhide rugs, Edelman; walls in Vicente Wolf White, Pittsburgh Paints.

INTERIOR DESIGN AND PHOTOGRAPHY BY VICENTE WOLF
PRODUCED BY CAROLYN ENGLEFIELD | WRITTEN BY CAROL PRISANT

In the course of his many decades in the field of interior design, Vicente Wolf has done everything once and umpteen things twice. Into the latter category falls this ethereal apartment, which he first crafted 14 years ago for a Manhattan businesswoman. Recently, she asked him to transform the feeling-a-little-tired space into a dreamy, airy aerie—because she wanted to enjoy her phenomenal views, she recalls telling him, from a sofa that wouldn't envelop her like the last one. She also requested her favorite silvery hues. She wanted real change. So her designer went to work.

Not only did Wolf transform and reconfigure the entire apartment, but he also arranged the flowers and took these photographs. That burst of nature in the living room, behind the new, non-enveloping sofa? He snipped the branches off a tree himself. Those tabletop peonies? The flower district at daybreak. "I like doing things myself, staying in touch," he says. That's why the designer doesn't delegate the small stuff. Although much of what he really does is listen.

Along with the space-freshening alterations on this go-round, Wolf explains, the homeowner also wanted "a whiteness, and what's more, a touch of the unconventional, because she's always loved the surreal." Now "whiteness" might seem easy but, along with life, it's complicated. For example, Wolf chose not just white, but high-gloss white for the living-room ceiling because, he says, "I like what a sheen can do for medium-height rooms. Also, at night, you catch nice reflections from the passing headlights."

An oversize wing chair echoes a curved wall that hides a piano. Chair in a KnollTextiles fabric, VW Home; lamp, Cedric Hartman; side tables and sculpture, VW Home. OPPOSITE: Table and dining chairs, Donghia; console, VW Home; sconces, Hinson Lighting.

THE HOMEOWNER WANTED "A whiteness, AND A TOUCH OF THE UNCONVENTIONAL, BECAUSE SHE'S ALWAYS LOVED THE SURREAL."

A silken curtain creates a flowing backdrop in the master bedroom. Armchair and custom bed in a fabric by Zimmer + Rohde; custom bedside table, VW Home; walls in Baby's Breath, Pittsburgh Paints; carpet, Fox Floors. OPPOSITE: Antique Italian chair in a Rogers & Goffigon fabric; J. Randall Powers lamp, Circa Lighting; custom screen in a Rogers & Goffigon fabric with Samuel & Sons trim.

The crisp new floors "took a lot of bleaching," he adds with a laugh, and he devised the huge, empty frames that lean against the clean, snowy walls to create serendipitous vignettes, but also to suggest, subliminally, Art with a capital A.

The owner loves every imaginative bit. "The first time we worked together was such a joy," she recalls, "that I couldn't wait to work with Vicente again." She says she especially likes "getting a 'wow' from all who enter for the first time."

Her bedroom, where an almost-sheer curtain floats behind the bed and shades of bluish-greenish-gray blanket the headboard and floors, feels absolutely cloud-like. "The bedroom is a woman's realm," Wolf explains. "It should feel as if you're being invited into a woman's private domain."

In the guest room, which does double duty as an office, a canopied 18th-century French daybed, fit for a princess, awaits visits from the homeowner's granddaughter. A series of white frames lining the walls evokes a kind of surreal antique paneling. And behind an exquisite custom-made shagreen desk, a beribboned screen was created to display postcards and ephemera.

"Designing apartments like this one is like playing house for me," Wolf says. "You're sort of playing with dolls. You're playing 'pretty.' And I never want to stop."

His fans and clients wholeheartedly hope he never will. □

With a canopied French daybed, the home office gracefully converts to a guest room. Bed canopy in Shyam Ahuja fabrics; daybed in a Jerry Pair fabric; custom club chairs in a Jerry Pair fabric with Samuel & Sons trim; table, Donghia; walls in Alpine Blue, Pittsburgh Paints. For more details, see Sourcebook.

PATH TO PARADISE

The humble charm and character of a 17th-century cottage in the German countryside captures the imagination of a designer with a passion for history.

INTERIOR DESIGN BY PETER NOLDEN | LANDSCAPE DESIGN BY CLEMENS ZYLKA
PHOTOGRAPHY BY ANDREAS VON EINSIEDEL | WRITTEN BY GISELA WILLIAMS

A farmer herds sheep in front of the 17th-century thatched-roof farmhouse that serves as designer Peter Nolden's weekend house in rural northern Germany.

The entryway features a 17th-century tapestry, and the red ceiling beams are original to the house. Nineteenth-century English table and French chandelier. OPPOSITE: Armchairs in a Souveraine linen, Howard and Sons; task light, Artemide; tablecloth, Leitner Linen; walls in Aqua, Peter Interior Farben.

PETER NOLDEN HAD LIVED SEVERAL OTHER LIVES BEFORE HE BECAME A MUCH-SOUGHT-AFTER INTERIOR DESIGNER.

First he was a nurse, then he was a teacher, and then, in his 30s, he went back to school to become a psychologist. It was only when he landed in the Hanseatic harbor city of Hamburg in his early 40s that he allowed himself to make a career of his lifelong love: collecting beautiful old objects and furniture.

In 1996, he opened a little antiques shop in Eppendorf, a tony enclave near the Aussenalster lake, which is lined with historic villas. He jokes that all the skills picked up in his previous professions have helped him succeed in this low-key city with lots of quiet wealth. "I know how to listen and read into the silence," he says.

Also, once he signs on to a project, Nolden is committed. He takes on no more than two homes a year, because everything he sources for a property is "made or found," he notes. "What I do is haute couture, not prêt-à-porter."

When it comes to designing his own homes, he is no less exacting. "What is important to me is authenticity, that no material is fake. That is perhaps what I've taken from my psychology training," he says, only half in jest. "I would rather have less, but have what is original and real."

That goes for his interiors. In the 1990s, he and his partner bought a 19th-century manor house in Normandy, France, and spent several years bringing the interiors back to their original state and outfitting it with the appropriate furniture. Nolden loved the house but eventually became frustrated by the length of time required to travel there.

Just over an hour's drive north of Hamburg is Schleswig-Holstein, a rural area of dandelion-yellow rapeseed fields, farms, reed-thatched homes, and raw coastline. It was there that Nolden eventually found, with the help of an agent, a renovated 17th-century thatched-roof farmhouse. It was set on three acres of overgrown land and built on a man-made island in the region's floodplains just about 10 miles from the North Sea. "I immediately fell in love with the original stone floors and the red ceilings," says Nolden. "The former owners had uncovered them. Nothing had been done to the color of the beams since the house had been built centuries ago."

He adds, "That's what I love the most. Finding a house that is 'in its own juice,' as they say in French. Then I can dive into the history and use that as a starting point. Of course, we all want modern infrastructure, hot water, and heat, but I like to walk into a historic house and find myself in the age that it was built."

Nolden oversaw several other adaptations that the original owners would not recognize. He opened up walls between the kitchen, living room, and dining room, installing antique wooden doors he found in Sweden between the latter two rooms. The table and seating in the dining room he also found in Sweden. "During the era in which the house was built, the region belonged to Denmark," he explains. "So I sourced much of the furniture in Scandinavia."

Now, after two decades as an interior designer, Nolden says he has no plans to switch careers again. "I was happy as a nurse and as a teacher, and I was very happy as a psychologist, but at one point, it was over for me," he admits. "Now, as a designer, I am sometimes tired, but I am never bored." □

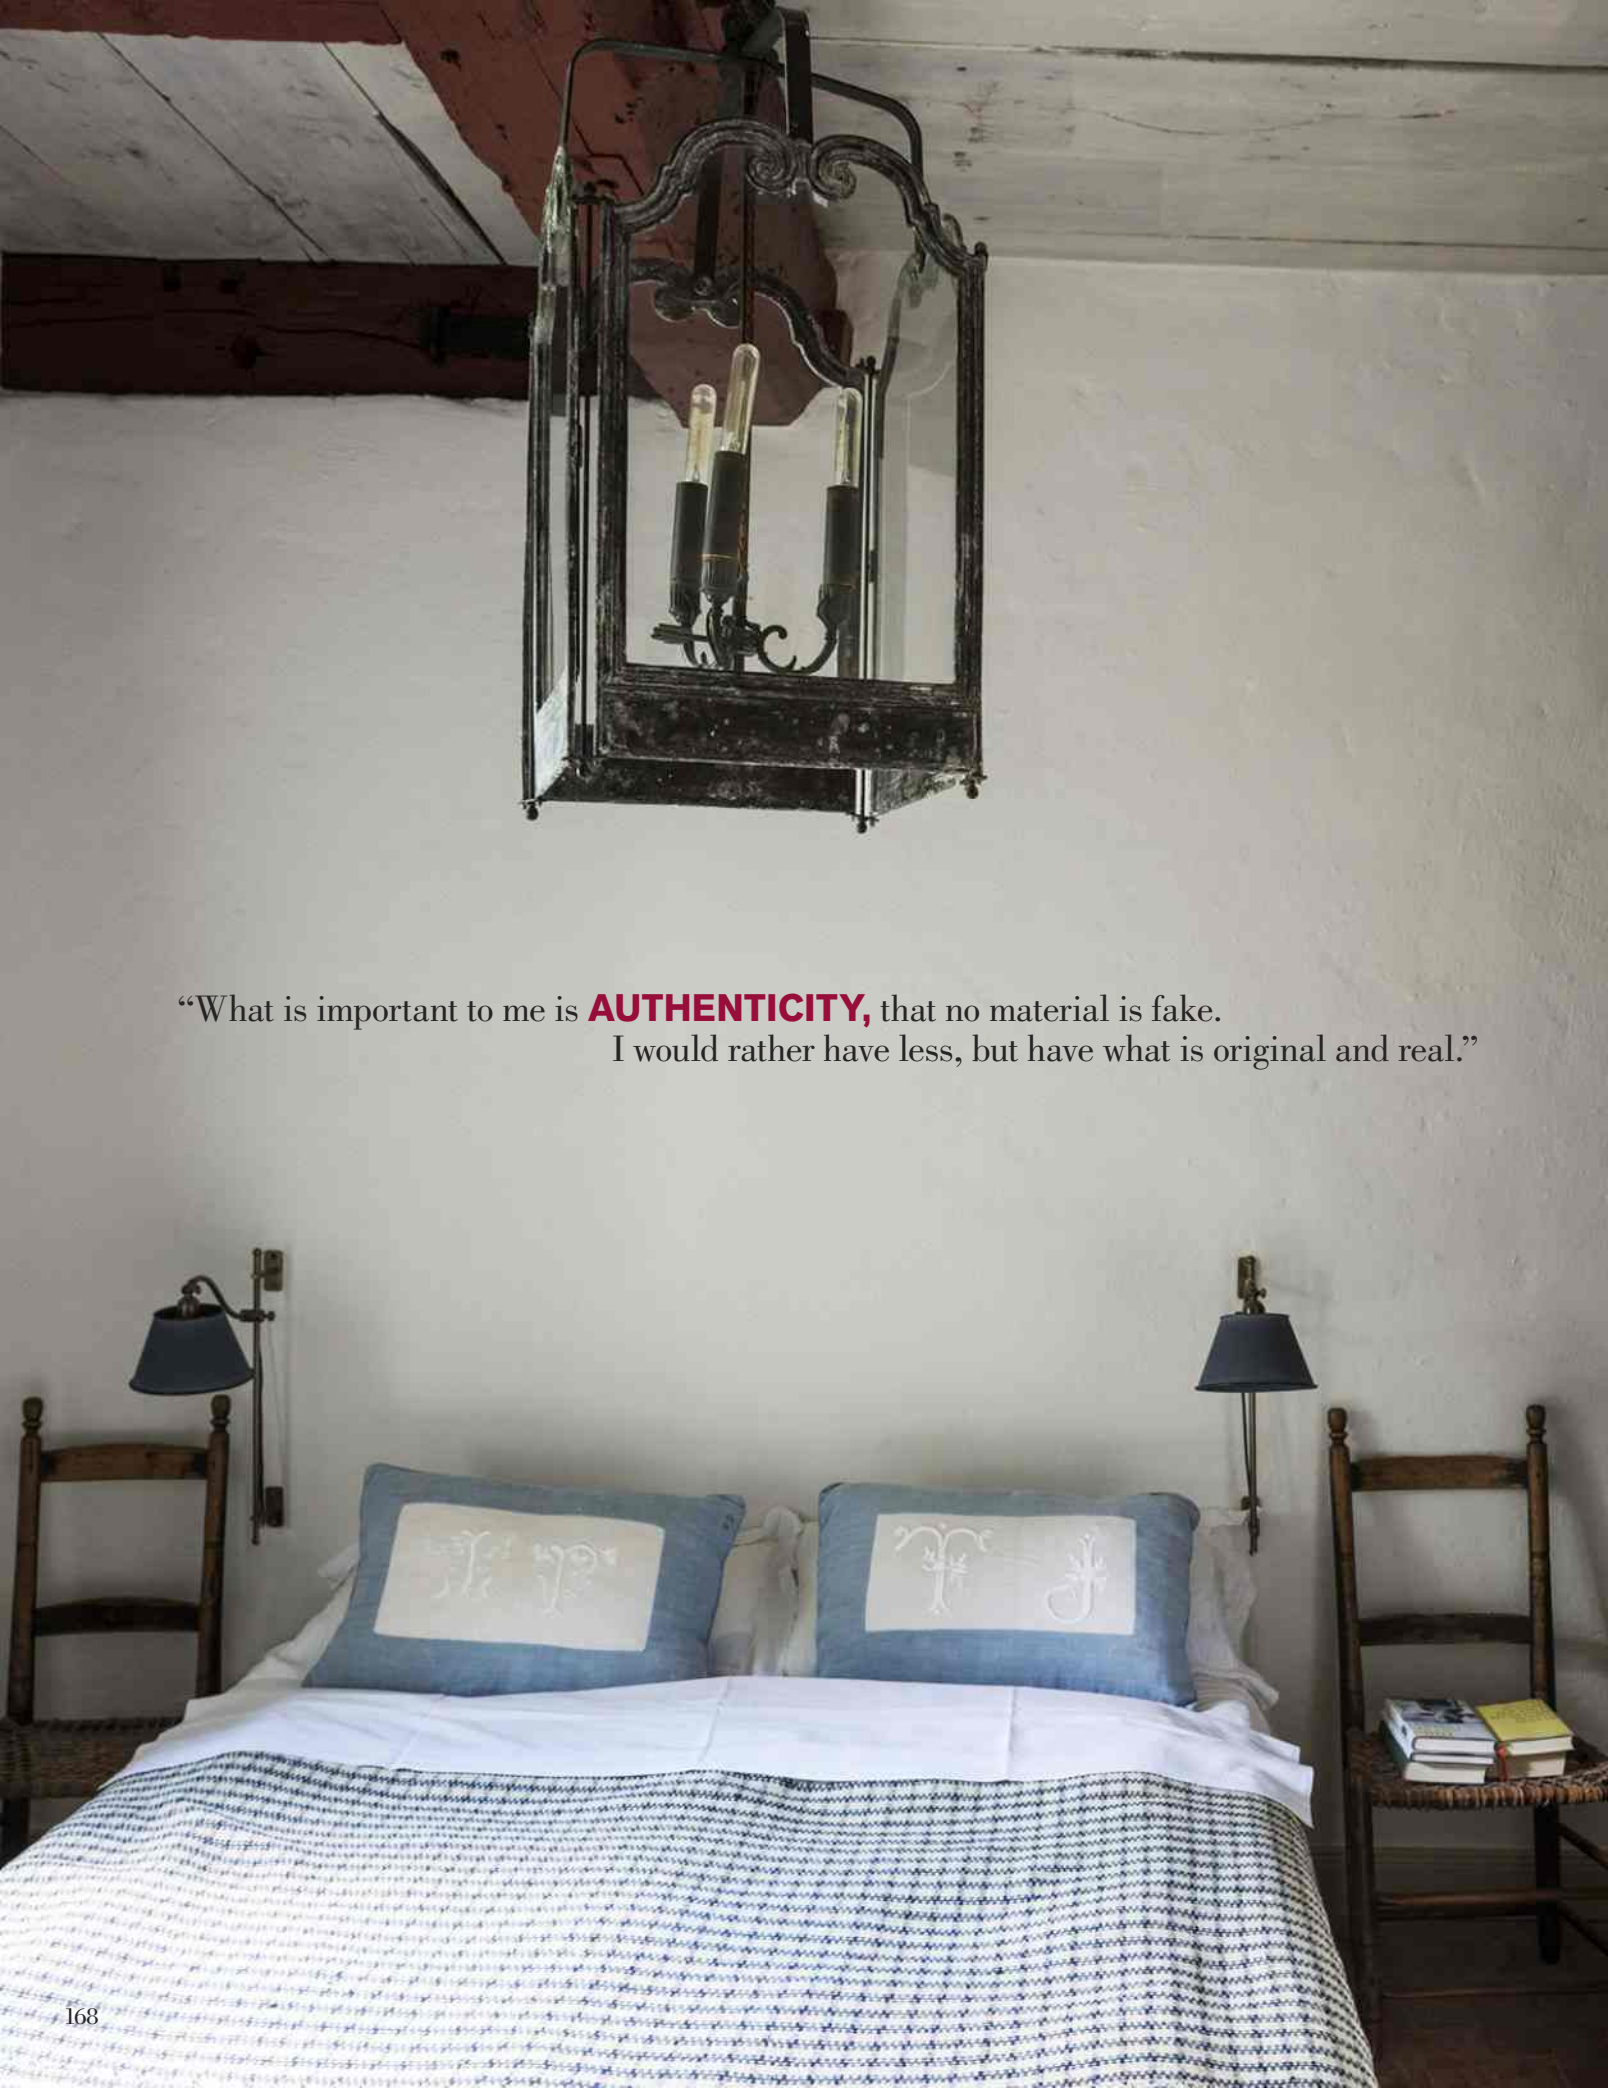

The wall between the dining room and living room was opened up to bring in light and air. Bench in a Le Manach check; 19th-century French chandelier and sconce. OPPOSITE: Range, Lacanche; 19th-century English chairs with cushions in a Colefax and Fowler fabric.

The study's blue cupboard holds a bed, a common farmhouse feature in the 18th century. Chair cushion in a Colefax and Fowler check; 19th-century kilim rug.

"What is important to me is AUTHENTICITY, that no material is fake.
I would rather have less, but have what is original and real."

The garden is planted with rhododendrons, strawberries, and climbing roses. OPPOSITE: Bed, Hästens; custom sconces, Peter Interior Design; 18th-century Danish lantern; walls in Edelweiss, Peter Interior Farben. For more details, see Sourcebook.
